

Ross A. Henry
Client Advisor

Ross A. Henry joined Laird Norton Tyee in 2004. As a client advisor, he combines his expertise in legacy planning, trust administration, personal income taxes and investment research to create effective strategies that meet client needs. Ross builds relationships and works closely with clients as they define their legacies and goals, then puts integrated solutions in place to deliver the desired results. His clients know that whatever their questions and concerns, Ross is available and willing to help them at any time.

Ross has more than nine years of wealth management experience. Prior to joining Laird Norton Tyee, he was with KeyCorp in private banking and trust administration, where he developed his knowledge of trusts, the fiduciary responsibilities of a trustee and a commitment to follow the wishes of the grantor. He also expanded his expertise in investment research including asset allocation, modeling and risk assessment.

Previously he was a financial advisor for Prudential Securities where he advised clients on achieving their long-term financial goals through investment strategies. In this role Ross gained extensive knowledge of securities and options as well as the financial vehicles available for investing. He also has experience in preparing personal income tax returns.

Ross graduated magna cum laude with a degree in chemistry from Washington University in Missouri. He has earned the designations of certified trust and financial advisor (CTFA), and Certified Financial Planner™ professional, and he holds a Series 65 license.
